Variable Fonts

OpenType variable fonts are an extension to the OpenType specification, introduced in OpenType 1.8. On 14 September 2016, Adobe, Apple, Google, and Microsoft announced the technology, which allows a single font file to store a continuous range of design variants.

Compatible Outlines

All masters have the same amount of paths, nodes and handles, as well as components.

All components, paths, nodes and handles are in the same order across all masters.

All masters have the same set of anchors.

Multiple Masters

The Adobe technology involved in interpolation is called 'Multiple Masters'. That's because we need multiple, at least two masters, in order to calculate steps between them.

Masters

Masters are what you draw. They are the input for the ensuing interpolation.

Instances

Instances are what the computer calculates. They are the output, the result of the interpolation.

Kerning

In typography, kerning is the process of adjusting the spacing between characters in a proportional font, usually to achieve a visually pleasing result. Kerning adjusts the space between individual letter forms, while tracking (letter-spacing) adjusts spacing uniformly over a range of characters.
